BEAUTY AND TIME. Time met Beauty ne day in her carden,
Where roses were blooming fair;
Time and Beauty were never good friends, Time and Beauty were never good friends,
S. she wondered what brought him there.
Poor Beauty exclaimed, with a sorrowful air,
"I request, Father Time, my sweet roses you'll spare"—
For Time was going to mow them all down;
While Beauty exclaimed, with her prettiest frown,
"Fie, Father Time! fie, Father Time!
Oh, what a crime! fie, Father Time!"

"Well," said Time, "at least let me gather Well," said Time, "at least let me game!
A few of your roses here;
"Tis part of my pride to be always supplied
With roses the whole of the year."
Poor Beauty consented, though half in despair,
And Time as he went asked a lock of her hair;
And, as he stole the soft ringlet so bright,
He vowed 'twas for love—but she knew 'twas for spite.
Fie, Father Time! &c.

Time went on, and left Beauty in tears-Time went on, and left Beauty in tears—
He's a tell-tale, the world well knows;—
So he boasted to all of the fair lady's fall,
And showed the lost ringlet and rose.
So shocked was poor Beauty to find that her fame
Was ruined, though she was in no wise to blame,
That she drooped like some flower that's torn from its

Egerton's Reply .- It was often said of old Chapman of Covent Garden Theatre, that he taught his sons to fight, before he taught them to read-certain it is, that they were equally petulent and pugnacious—and the thing next heard of either S. or W. Chapman (after their engagement in any new company) was, that they had knocked up a play and knocked down the manager. This puglistic propensity was most peculiarly developed in Samuel (the youngest and smallest) who had fairly fought his way through the provinces. When the late Mr Egerton took Sadler's Wells theatre, S. Chapman Mr Egerton took Sadler's reply was Among her thousand-and-one lovers was the Count Zebullon, who, in utter despair, at last set off in search of the waters of oblivion. At Constantinople, however, he received a letter from the lady, begging him to return, on an affair of great importance. Supposing that distance had "lent enchantment to the view," he returned with the delightful belief that the lady had relented in his favor. He found her lovlier than ever; and, receiving favor. WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1836.

Libel Law .- The Franklin (Greenfield) Mercury is out in favor of the Judge law of libel in this State, under which, without any valid law, men are kidnapped and pot

It contends, that though the Constitution guarantees the unrestrained liberty of the press, yet publishers are responsible in criminal prosecutions, for an abuse of that liberty; but the Constitution says nothing about this abuse. The

"The argument of the Post is, in substance, that the Constitution guarantees the liberty of the press, and therefore no man can be held answerable [criminally, we said,] for the abuse of that liberty. So does the Constitution guarantee the right of keeping arms—but it does not therefore tollow that a man may go unpunished for using those arms against his neighbor. The Constitutional provision was meant to guard against any censorship or restraint on publishing; but if any man is charged with publishing what injurious to public peace or public morals, he must take his chance, like every other person charged with crime, before a jury of twelve of his fellow-citizens."

The right of keeping arms is a qualified right-and hence does not offer a parallel case to the liberty of the press, which is guaranteed without qualification. The Constitution says-"The people have a right to keep and bear arms for the common defence"-not to shoot a neighbor.

The Mercury says, "the Constitutional provision was meant to guard against any censorship or restraining on publishing." We say it was intended to guard against both the previous and after censorship of the press. The Constitution says nothing about immoral or moral publications; neither does any law of this State make immoral publications criminal; if it did, the publishers of McDowell's Journal should be indicted. The Mercury further

"Our law of libel is derived [mark, derived] from the old common law, which is recognised and enforced by the Constitution, subject to the modification and supervision of

The old common law of libel, which is English Judge law, introduced into England as a substitute for the previous censorship of the press, we assert, is not recognised by our Constitution; and we challenge the Mercury to show how and where it is thus recognised. The Constitution recognises no law, common or statute law, but such as "was usually practiced on in the courts of law" at the adoption of the Constitution. Will the Mercury show us that indictments for libel, at common law, were usually practiced on in the courts of this State previous to 1782? Will the Mercury undertake to say that the Judiciary of this State recognise, in its full extent, the English common law libel law? We say they do not. And what right have they to alter it, to "derive" their law from it, and not take it entire? Will it show us how the Legislature has a right to recognise this restraint upon the press, when the Constitution says there ought to be none?

The Mercury takes its neighbor, the Gazette, to task for being more just and liberal than itself on this subject. That, however, is a matter for the Gazette to settle, and it is amply able to do it. The Mercury says-

"The indecent violence of this attack (of the Post) upon the Judiciary, is not less remarkable than its feebleness in point of reasoning.'

If the Judiciary have, as we aver, imprisoned men for libels, without the authority of law, we do not feel bound to study soft terms in expressing our reprobation of such acts. As for the force of our reasoning, we shall not vaunt it like the Mercury, but leave it for the public to decide.

A Letter from New Orleans, dated the 6th of December, contains the following theatrical chit-chat:-

"On the 7th of November the Mammoth opened in the most unlinished state you can imagine. Not a window glazed in the immense house. Not a lobby plastered, papered, or painted. The stair cases with a rough slab rudely nailed on, and every thing in the most lamentable condition. Their opening good, but not great. Their orchestra superb-company so, so,-and their operas thus far (one week) no very wonderful go. People complain that the honer is so large that they can't hear, and on the whole, yet the experiment is looked upon as an equally splendid failure. The old house, which by the way is one of the most comfortable and elegantly arranged I have ever seen, still goes on well.

Miss Cushman, at Caldwell's, has not succeeded; a paper of yesterday says "she is hardly a 3d rate singer."-Clara Fisher and Mrs Gibbs are the great favourites there. Celeste will doubtless do a prodigious business. .. Gambati and Norton are trying their skill in performances from ularly who come to hear him, are in ecstasies.

I suppose at this moment you are shivering over a great fire, or muffled up in your cloak,-while I am writing at an open window, with a beautiful bouquet of roses lying before me, just plucked in an open garden opposite, where I can see the pomegranate in blossom, the oranges green and ripe, and fifty trees of which I do not know half the names, either budding or bearing fruit."

Opening of the Lion Theatre.-The following is the Prize Address," spoken by Miss MONIER, at the opennight. The name of the successful competitor for poetic PRIZE ADDRESS.

In that green vale where lone Ilissus flows, O'er Athens' wreck, the mournful ivy grows, To hide in shame the city's blushing face,

Yet there have Art and Learning found their homes, Spread their rich gifts, and reared their stately domes; There Genius trod, and fresh from Pindus' springs, Waved his wet curls and shook his dewy wings, Admiring myriads thronged around the stage, And reaked instruction from the poet's page. There white-haired Age and Beauty's laughing dames In crowds assembled at th' Olympian games, Where the fleet horse, obedient to the rein, Whirled the swift chariot o'er the dusty plain And rival heroes, thirsting for renown Sought the proud triumph and the victor's crown.

But from the North, that nurse of savage men, The flerce barbarian left his rocky glen; Allured by fairer skies and warmer suns, From realm to realm the conq'ring despot runs; From Thrace he flies to Lacedæmon's walls, And wretched Greece in crumbling ruin falls.

The Drama, then, to Rome's wide empire fled, And there again raised her majestic head.
Then, passing eastward o'er all Europe's land,
Gaul's fertile fields and Albien's happy strand,
Braves the rough billows and th' Atlantic's roar,
And lights at last on Freedom's sacred shore.

Here shall her realms extend, her altars rise, And her tall temples lift them to the seies. where Ohio murmurs through the wood, Mississippi rolls his turbid flood; Wherever man through forest shades shall stray, There shall she rule and thousands own her sway

Oh then, kind friends! may you protect her right, Cheer her glad course, and bid her hail to-night; Let bigot Pride, with consequential frown, On her light sports in cold disdain look down; Long shall it be, ere falt'ring, she shall pause, If Merit plead, and you support her cause.

In our notice of the opening in our paper yesterday, we were compelled to be brief, and to omit any specific reference to the different performances-either on the stage or in the ring. The happily combined dramatic and circus exhibitions, commencing with the comedy bearing the appropriate title of the "Open House," in which Mrs KENT, formerly of the Tremont, sustained the character of Mrs Matchet, and led off the piece in a free and spirited of Andover. style. Mr Read, in olden time, a great favorite at the Federal Street Theatre, also made his re-appearance before a Boston audience, in the piece, and essentially contributed its amusing absurdity, by his serio-comico enacting of Harry Villars. Young Durivage, recently returned from southern professional tour, has acquired a complete familiarity with the business of the stage, and treads it like one at home; and, as Cousin Todd, fully justified the judgment of the manager, in assigning to him the lead as the low comedian of the theatre. The remainder of the cast also threw into their efforts a spirit of buoyancy and heartiness, which materially aided in the lively and bustling effect of the representation, and the curtain dropped amid a general feeling of approbation. The comedy followed by equestrian exercises in the circus, and the Grand Entre, and Waltzing by the whole troop, was splendid and interesting beyond expression. Nothing could exceed the absolute command which the accomplished riders possessed over their beautiful steeds, or the admirable ease with which they wheeled them through all the dizzy mazes of the dance, in perfect time with the music. The ever-yielding obedience and almost human sagacity of these extraordinary animals, was really wonderful. In no ball-room were ever such complicated figures more gracefully or accurately executed, and no part of the performances afforded more enduring and unmingled gratification to the enthusiastically applauding audience. The achievements in horsemanship of Nathans and Robinson, were superior to anything of the kind which has been exhibited in this city for many years; but a general improvement in this department will necessarily take place, as the horses become more accustomed to the size of the ring, and the surface of the arena becomes more settled and compact. Some of the horses did not appear to "have the hang of it," and, in some instances, somewhat impaired the efforts of their agile riders. The vaulting gave very general satisfaction; but, perhaps, the most surprising exnibition was that of Signor Perez, who kept a large globe dancing in the air, with his feet, and also balanced a heavy pole on them in a very singular manner. His finally givng to the pole a horizontal rotary motion of extreme velocity was an almost incredible display of pedal dexterity— a marvellous coup-de-peid—and drew down deafening

The after-piece of "Law and Lions" took well, and the lensely crowded auditory retired highly delighted with the evening's entertainment; and, in truth, we doubt whether any theatre in the country combines more sources of permanent attraction and animating amusement than " Lion"-the creation of a day, as it were-but fare, which will contain some pleasant diversion adapted to the taste of every auditor.

PENMANSHIP. Messrs Richardson & Stratton, are both so well known to the Boston public, as teachers of Penmanship, and have taught that art with so much success in this city, that it will perhaps be unnecessary to say any thing further of their system of instruction, the merits of which are so universally acknowledged. For the intormation, however, of persons who reside at a distance, and may be desirous of being taught the above branches, they beg leave to add, that the system is simple and natural, and will readily remove that stiffness of the arm and fingers which is so embarrassing, and which other professors.

BOOK-KEEPING.
In the department of Book-Keeping, Messrs. R. & S. have ad much personal experience, and have also derived valuable attenuation from several eminent merchants of this city, which enables them to combine the elementary instructions of the master, with the practical improvements of the merchant. They propose to initiate young gentlemen, who are about entering upon Commercial Business, not to trach merchants. They do not pretend to have made any new inventions or discoveries, but will, in all cases follow the most approved precedents of mercantile experience, and give their pupils such practice, as wine gible them, when they arrive at the Counting house, to transact business with precision and aespatch.
